Having been involved with computers education business for 40 years the continuous complaint was there was no common platform and no common operating system . No computer could talk to another computer. We now have a common platform the PC and internet we now have a common operating system Windows. The COMMON MAN can click on windows like he or she operates a toaster knowing things will work . There is no way for it to be free someone has to pay for it. And someone makes a profit. There are millions of programs that can be programmed and a profit made from because of Windows. The only problem is that several BUSINESSES want their operating system to be the default . When that happens are they going to be sued? This is all just sour grapes. Get rid of the lawsuit let the world get on with things using the common platform of the PC and the common operating system Windows.
